

Neurotransmitter Dominant Nature & Deficiencies

Questionnaire

Part I: Determining Your Dominant Nature

Instructions: Answer each question by circling either T (true) or F (false). At the end of each group, in the space provided, record only the total number of True statements. Answer the questions in terms of how you feel most of the time. For example, if you've had a bad night's sleep and feel tired today, answer the questions that pertain to your energy levels based on how you feel on a more average day.

2A · Total # of T responses (acetylcholine nature): _____

3A · Total # of T responses (GABA nature): _____

4A · Total # of T responses (serotonin nature): _____

The category with the greatest number of T (True) responses will identify your dominant nature. A classically dominant nature is typically a score of 35 and above in any one category, which suggests a less-than balanced life.

NOTE: When any other nature is 10-15 points lower than the dominant one, the nature with the lower score is probably a lifelong relative deficiency and needs balance even in times of good health. For example, if your score is 40 dopamine, 33 acetylcholine, 25 GABA, and 17 serotonin, you likely have a long-standing relative deficiency in both GABA and serotonin.

Part II: Defining Your Deficiencies

Instructions: Answer each question by circling either T (true) or F (false). At the end of each group, in the space provided, record only the total number of True statements.

The second assessment will determine if you are deficient in any of the four biochemicals, including the one that governs your nature. Many of the questions relate to symptoms you might be experiencing. Answer questions in terms of how you feel right now; it doesn't matter how long you've been experiencing these symptoms, or even if they occurred today for the first time.
